I don't know what email address you are using, so please clarify.

On a separate note, please accept my sincere apologies for the following things, in keeping with what I hope will be sincere reciprocation from you in response to my recent email covering enumerated issues:

1. Ever contacting your ex and those affiliated with him.
2. Failing to get court authorization to withdraw as your lawyer before melting into your decided enticements to enter you.
3. Giving into my kids' perceived needs in 2003 and giving their mother a second chance I truly thought would be short-lived (until you unexpectedly filed your bar complaint), instead of simply being true to my heart, and putting us both through so much doubt, loneliness and hurt for the next two years.
4. Failing to push [Wife #1] off me when I awoke on the morning I left her for you the final time in 2005. I realize now, and in retrospect, how much that bothered and hurt you, and how much I owed you much greater, absolute love and fidelity at that time and always.
5. Communicating with third parties (I.e., doctors) about you out of misplaced confusion, hurt and jealousy you, too, have rather cutely exhibited when [Wife #2] was pulling me from you.
6. Failing to dedicate much more time to you in lieu of spending so much time on the computer dealing with [Wife #1] so pointlessly.
7. Failing to give you regular sexual attention and unabashed orgasms and satisfaction.

I still have your voice message about Gordon Lightfoot and Christmas from December, 2007. I've listened to it often since then.
